The speeches of Mr. James Macarthur, Dr. MURPHY, and Mr. FRANCIS MAC-ARTHUR, were very creditable specimens of colonial stoquence. The first-named of these gentlemen seems to improve with every effort in the art of public speaking; and we rejoice that a person of his standing in the community, and of the reputation attached to his name and family in the mother country, should so manfully have come forward, with the weight of his influence and 'alents, to assist his fellow-colonists in their present momentum. struggle. The value of his co-operation is considerably enhanced by the obvious disinterestedness of his motives. He declares that so little of direct personal or pecuniary interest has he in the present question, that whether we have the old or the new regulations, the difference to him cannot be more than some £10 or £20 a year. No one, therefore, can attribute the seal of Mr. JAMES MACARTHUR to the real of Mr. JAMES MACARTHUR to the irritability of wounded selfishness. He take his stand upon the high ground, that the pastoral interest is but another name for the interest of the whole colony, and that those who own not a single sheep, but who yet seek their fortunes from colonial resources, of whatever kind, are as much concerned in these regulations as the licensed graziers themselves. This is the me next themselves. This is the As we have ventured to be perfectly clear and correct, and very happily expressed. "It was not fitting," he remarked, "it was not secully, it was not in any way defensible, this one man, however high his rank, however stainless his reputs, should be the sole administrator of the Crown lands of this colony. I now not for the interest of the Crown that he should be so; and no conscientious of high-minded man could desire to be vested with such perilous authority." And if the authority ought not to vest with the Governor, where can it be advantageously and properly placed? "In any point of view it appeared to him that the administration of the Crown lands should be in some degree confided to the regulation and control of the local legislature, subject of course to certain general and well-defined principles, to be laid down in the first instance by the Imperial authors, the course to certain general and well-defined principles, to be laid down in the first instance by the Imperial authors, the course to certain general and well-defined principles, to be laid down in the first instance by the Imperial authors, the course of cortain general and well-defined principles, to be laid down in the first instance by the Imperial authors, the course of the local legislature, to force them to compliance?"

These sentiments were echoed by Mr. Francis Macariura, whe maintained Crown lands must be revised; the present mode of administering them, the Crown lands should be placed under the regulation and control of the local legislature. In the Grown has a right to require that they be administering them, the Crown lands should be placed under the regulation and control of the local legislature. The Crown has a right to require that they be administered as the control of the local legislature. The Crown has a right to require that they be administering them, the Crown lands than the local legislature. The Crown has a right to require that they be administered as the control of the local legislature. The Crown has a right to require that they be adminis persons who have been accustomed to the comforts and ogrémens of an old-established community to undergo the privations and positive discomforts of going into the in-terior of a country like this with their

even when that assent had been obtained. and the bill had thereby passed into "an act of the GOVERNOR and Council," the measure would still be subject to the review of the Minister, and might be quashed in a moment by the Royal disallowance.

It may be asked, however, what would the colony gain by the Crown lands being placed under the cognizance of the local placed under the cognizance of the local legislature, if its plans were to be thus subject to a double veto? The answer is, we should gain the advantages of deliberate enquiry, of thorough investigation, of free and open discussion. We should have a better adjusted and more efficient machinery better adjusted and more flicient machinery for the eliciting of truth, and for the working out of sound conclusions. We should have legislation by daylight, inatead of as now, by the dim rushlights of authority. And, though last not least, we should have the satisfaction of being ruled like men, and not like children—like free British subjects, and not like so many

NEW SOUTH WALES.
One of the first questions likely to engage the attention of the Legislature of New South Wales is the position of the great stockholders outside the districts of the colony open for sale and actilement.

They hold their stations by grazing leases, renewable anomalous. This is well enough so long as the district is not open for sale. But they live under a constant uncasiness, looking forward to the possibility of the district being opened for sale. Mr. Winderen, who appeared for the plaintiff, stated that the action upon the second note was abandoned, as he must admit his inability to prove the giving of a proper notice. Mr. Darvall. appeared for the defendant, and stated that erroneous and misleading particulars of demand had been rendered by the plaintiff, from which the defendant might reasonably have supposed that the note named in the second count was the only one upon which the plaintiff sought to recover.

The witness called in support of this argument did not, however, appear, and the assessors under His Honor's direction, found a verdict for the plaintiff.

The remaining cases on the list were either undefended or settled by mutual arrangement. The Court adjourned till ten o'clock tomorrow (this morning.)

He would also at the same time take the sense of the Council as to the expediency of faviting the co-operation of the other District Councils throughout the territory in the attainment of these objects.

Mr. Unwin gave notice, that at the next meeting of Council he would bring under consideration the case of the residents on the Newtown road, in being obliged to repair that read and to pay for repairing the same alse by way of toll, and at the same time made liable to the general assessment of the district.

So that if we boil this number, at the end of this year, we shall not have three months' consumption of ripe mutton on hand, without allowance for export by sea or land, perhaps 100,000 more, and the butchers must give higher prices—this exact state of the stock was foretold (except the boiling) in the letters of Jason, two years ago. This year the male increase will hardly replace the consumption,—and boiling, if the latter continue to the full extent; but next year the addition of the female lambs to the breeding flocks, will cause a surplus of male stock; but the frightful state of things which causes the "departures" of adults now to exceed the "arrivals" (exclusive of the Government Immigrants) may then have passed away—and we may then have "more mouths and more market;" mean time let it be borne in mind that every sheep boiled three years before it would otherwise die, or be stangthered, diminishes our exports by the value of three fleeces, or 9s., whilst the export of tallow (14th, at 3d.) is only 3s. 6d., ioss to the colony in three years 5s. 6d., and to the owner, the small excess, whatever it may be, of the value of the fleece beyond the expense of shepherding and market; but to the colony the loss in three years will be £88,000—or nearly £30,000 per annum. But an ox yields but one hide. We had in September 897,000—now with calves at least 1,000,000 cattle; at 24 lb. per week in addition to mutton, &c., per week per head, we can consume 34,000 oxen, and export perhaps 16,000 of all ages, together 50,000; so that class the sexes and ages as you will, we must now have four year's consumption and export of beef on hand, and our annual male increase only will be equal to three or four year's demand, and will be enormously increased during the next two years, from the reserved female calves. NEWS FROM THE UNTERIOR. NEW SQUATTING REGULATIONS.
PUBLIC MEETING.
(From a Supplement to the Mailland Mercary)

On Tuesday a public was held

On Tuesday, a public meeting was held, pursuant to advertisement, at the Rose Inn, West Maitland for the purpose of taking into consideration the new regulations respecting the aquatting interest. The meeting was numerously attended, and many of the most influential stock-holders, both of the Upper and Lower Hunter districts, were present.

E. C. Chosa, Eeg., having been called to the chair, read the advertisement from the Maitland Mercury by which the meeting had been convened, and said he need not inform them, that they had meet on a most serious occasion, and one in which all their interests were deeply involved. He trusted that in the discussion of the subject for which they were met they would be guided by moderation in the language which they used, and that whilst that language was suited to the the language which they used, and that whilst that language was suited to the occasion by its firmness, it would at the same time be respectful. He hoped that meetings such as that would be held throughou. The hooloby, and that they would be the means of ridding them of that oppressive load with which the colonists were likely to be efficient. It had stockholders to remove their stavving flocks and herds from the parched plains of Liverpool during the late most dreadful drought, until it was almost too late, coupled with his Excellency's last act, was good." (Cheers.) coupled with his excessions a less on, was quite sufficient to settle the matter (hear). The attempt to impose a fresh burthen on the stockholders, at a time of such lamentthe stockholders, at a time or such larger able depression, at a time too when the Governor was aware of the general state of bankruptoy in the colony, was not to be overlooked. Under such circumstances to old regulations, vis., £10. He thought this bore unequally upon the large and try to levy such a tax, a tax which he try to levy such a tax, a tax which he hadno right to catablish, was monstrous in the axe she. (Hear, hear). It had been showed the clearest evidence that the granters or equatters had paid over and above all exposes necessary for keeping that drunken, worthless corps, the border police, one less a stan annually than £25,000. Ought not that to satisfy the rapasity of the Executive Government without endeavouring utterly to ruin the unfortunate equatters? He contended that to devote the revenue derived by assessment on stock to any other purpose than all such tyranny and oppression. (Hear, hear). He would say to the meeting, petition, petition, petition, but they must take care to avoid the wet blanket dehear). He would say to the meeting, petition, petition, petition, but they must take care to avoid the wet blanket described in the manly and eloquent speech of Mr. B. Boyd, one of the real friends of Australia. It had been argued that abuses had crept into the squatting system in some instances; but if those arguments were correct, did it not show the necessity of appointing efficient officers, with orderly, sober, and active men to attend to the duties of the outer stations, in the room of those loungers about those pest houses licensed to retail ardent spirits beyond the boundaries, and consequently beyond aft control of the regularly established pellos. It had been reported by a writer in one of the public journals, who was evidently not a friend to the Bishop of Australia, that the act of the 2nd of this month had emanated with his Lordahip; but his Lordahip had no reason to be thankful to the scribe for attempting to finite on him the odium of such an act. The colonists had a right to expect better treatment from the Governor, as he undoubtedly possessed great talents, and many most inestimable virtues in private life. He would not detain the meeting longer, as there were many gentlemen better able than himself westing to ad-

ank, should it not be the policy of a wise government to universe and promote by all the means in its power the interest of the sequence of the squatters, and pastoral pursuits generally, as the primary source of revenue? Had that been done? No. But the line of conduct pursued by the government towards the stockholders of this much in jured colony was diametrically opposite to the course it should have taken. Had the welfare of the colony been at all studied or considered by the executive government. The blame of mismanagement had been constantly throws upon Lord Stanley and the home government; but who, he would als, advised Lerd Stanley to adopt measure so repugnisant to the welfare of the colonists? Of course the Governor, upon Lord Stanley, who, it had been shown, was in a complete state of ignorance as to the real state of affairs in this colony. The real state of affairs in this colony the arm of industry was paralysed, become not extravagant, however prone they might have been to speculation: some of these speculations, he was conniced, had turn determined the many of the colonists when the colonists was a supported the colonists; but to so, one of them, in a spirit of wrophecy, had said that property mutat change hands, but the revenue would not be affected, as the sheep and eatalk would still be in the colony to be taken and the colonists when the colonists is the solony, and conspared it with the prevent was no necessity for the real state of affairs in this colony. The real state of affairs in this colony the colonists when the colonists is the colonists when the colonists when the colonists is the colonists when the colonists is one of them, in a spirit or property must change hands, but the revenue would not be affected, as the hoped he should hear of his being tarred sheep and cattle would still be in the colony to be taxed. Such were the tender mercles of the man who had declared that the contract life in the colony were for the man who had declared that the contract life in the colony, and it was also to present the tender of the successors, nearly for a location was then put and carried. whilst that lenguage we suited to the occasion by its firmness, it would at the same time be respectful. He hoped that meetings such as that would be held throughout the colonic time colony, and the theory would be the means of ridding them of that oppressive load with which the colonists were likely to be afflicted. It had been suggested that some of the Sydney resolutions should be adopted by the meeting; gentlemen were ready to move the resolutions which had been prepared, and he would be happy to attend to any remarks which they might have to make. (Cheery).

Mr. C. M. Dovla said heregretted much that it had sot fallen to the lot of some gentlemen more composent than he was to propose a resolution of such vital importance to the colonists as that which had been entirated to the cuite of the handle individual who had thet the honour of addressing the meeting; but having fathered the banking he must do his best to support it, but are he presented it for their approval he trusted they would be remained to the cuite of the motor of addressing the meeting; but having fathered the banking he must do his best to support it, but are he presented it for their approval he trusted they would be remained to the cuite of the motor of addressing the meeting; but having fathered the banking he must do his best to support it, but are he presented it for their approval he trusted they would bear with him while he made a few observations. His bantling, as all others had been, was a mere squastre, but it was admitted that the aquastrers were the life and coul of the colony, and such being the case he would ask, should it not be the policy of a wise government to uree and promotos by all the means in its power the interests of the squatters, and pastoral pursuits generally, as the primary source of revenue? Had that been done? No. But the life of conduct pursued by the government to conduct pursued by the scenarior, the colonial content of the colonity and the primary source of revenue? Had that been done? No. But the line of about £22,000 or £23,000, and the money which was raised by licenses, and which was not regarded as a tax, was about £15,000. The expenses of the Border Police amounted to about £10,000, and the same of the sam leaving a samplus of about £10,000 or £12,000. The expenses of the commissioners, which amounted to about £5000, were paid out of the sums arising from license fees; while the Border Police were paid out of the money arising from the assessment of stock, which it was estinated would this year produce abou £26,000. Mr. OGILVIE said the system of licens as well as that of assessment, was adopted money thus raised was not sufficient for the purpose, at they again petitioned, asking for an assessment upon stock, and he recollected that Sir George Gipps, when he was waited upon, replied to the deputation that he was not sure they were right, have protection against cattle stralers; they asked for no more than that, and at the time they asked for the assessment upon sheep and cattle, notwithstanding what was said by the Governor, it was understood that no more should be called for than was necessary to afford such pro-

tion, which he held in his hand, was so ap that he feared he could throw no new light upon it; that he might, in fact, simply read it, and let it rest there, but he wished to explain his own views a little. He would not enter upon the question of the £10 license, as he thought it had been clearly explained by Mr. Wyndham as having been merely a test of character. The only question was whether, even if the tax was just, this was a proper time to bring it forward. His own impression was that the Governor was a little unfortunate in the time he had chosen to increase the capenses of the squatters, and to injure them was to injure the colony at large—it was to injure trade and commerce; no one could doubt that fact. As had been shown by Mr. Ogilvie, these regulations were a tax upon their export article, and this would come home to all the colony; for a injure any country which imposed it, and would ruin and throw down many. It would also lower the colony in the estimation of other countries. Any additional tion of other countries. Any additional burthens would cause the squatters who possessed land to draw within the limits of the colony, and would compel the people to emigrate to other places—to Valparaiso for instance, as had already been the case to some extent. Without the some extent. to some extent. Without the squatters there would be no employment for the population, and he did think that these regulations were unconstitutional, as the taxes without the consent of the legislature Governor possessed the power to veto all acts which might be passed for the good of the people; and whilst such a power was exercised the colony could not prosper. The sooner, therefore, they got rid of the present Governor the better although of the present Governor the better, although, as Mr. Wentworth had observed, the exquarters, from persons who were not com-petent to give him just information. He (Capt. R.) did not believe that the Gover-nor intended or wished to destroy the squatters, but he was ignorant of their rants and circumstances. Many of these the same things. The fact was, that the whole system wanted revising, but what did they know about It? What, for instance, did they know of the state of New England? The whole thing required to be looked into. It was most absurd that the sole power of granting a license should be vested in the Commissioner; it could not be supposed that he had the opportunity of knowing every applicant, and any one who did apply for a license could be seriously injured by the misrepresentations of others, or by the caprice of an oppressive and tyrannical commissioner.

which was as tollows :-That the commercial and trading classes of the community are most intimately connected with, and dependant upon, the prosperity of the great pastoral interests of the colony, and that the members of those classes meeting.

Mr. Lipscoms said as a trading man handle agent pleasures the colony and the bad great pleasures as a trading man handle great pleasures the commercial trading the commercial pleasures the commercial trading the commercial pleasures the commercial trading the commercial trading the commercial trading the commercial trading trading the commercial trading trading the commercial trading trading the commercial trading trading trading the commercial trading trading trading trading the commercial trading That the commercial and trading he had great pleasure in seconding the resolution, for he was intimately concerned in the access of his customers. If they had so money in their pockets it was clear the should not pay for what they purhased; his private interests, therefore, independent of those of a higher nature, independent of those of a higher nature. shows the clearest evidence that the grainers of aquatters had paid over and above all expenses necessary for keeping and actual the process of the constant of the process of the process of the constant of the process of the proces independent of those of a higher nature, induced him to support the squatters. If they saw a man knocked down on the road be the means of forming the colonists into a compact body, for the purpose of refuting the calumnies which might be uttered against it. They had seen this done in other colonies, in Canada and the West Indies for instance, and with the most but conferring general benefit upon the colony. With reference to this measure of the Governor, he (Mr. Lipscomb) remembered to have read a passage in Locke, in which that writer said if they wanted should give it some name, so as to conve to their minds at once the real objects and bearing of the measure. He thought lescribing this measure of the Governor's political Sangradoism (laughter), or a ystem of bleeding : no matter what state he patient might be in, nothing would do but bleed, bleed, bleed. He did not, however, look upon the Governor as the Dr. Sangrado, who was represented by the Colonial Minister, while the Governor was his man Gil Blas; and they might remember, that while it was the practice f Gil Bias to bleed, bleed, he never for-These regulations contained seven paragraphs, and the sum £10 was mentioned in them five times, so that it was easy to be seen, that while the Governor did the bleeding, he also looked after the fees. (Hear, hear.) But the state in which storatives, should be administered to him, and not that he should endure so much bleeding. (Hear, hear.) The Governor concluded that the colony had long been in a state of great excitement, and that nothing but bleeding would do, and he was consequently continually applying the lancet; he seemed to forget that in the might rally and even survive. He forgot all this. But the fact was, the Governor's mind was warped by prejudice; he was imbued with the Wakefield system of £1 an acre; and his sole desire seemed of their beds and walk into some trict, where they should pay this £1 an acre; but the fact was, they did not like to pay it, and they would not pay. He did not believe that the Governor to do the squatters any especial harm; for everyone agreed that His Excellency was a most impartial man, and that his impartiality consisted in his having done equi injustice to all. (Laughter.) He should be happy to see the Governor placed like his prototype, Mr. Gil Blas, who bled his patients so much that they at last became disgusted with him, and obliged him hastily to walk off from that part of the pountry—he should like to see the Go-vernor removed from this colony, and laced in a model colony, where the £1 an acre system was pursued; but that system would not do here, where the only return they could get for their £1 would be perhaps a leg of mutton annually. He knew that it had been once held in the gave for his sheep, he could look to the increase, and that would be sure to pay; the Governor had taken advantage of this sort of calculation to urge on the most oppressive measures, until he had sucreeded in extracting every shilling out of

That the following gentlemen be That the following gentlemen be appointed a district committee to correspond with the centual Committee in Fydney, and that they do exert themselves to obtain signatures to the petitions now in progress; Messrs, A. M'Dougall, E. C. Close, G. Wyndham, E. Hungerford, C. M. Doyle, D. Capel, Walter Scott, E. Turner, Charles Reymolds, John Parnell, Casels, W. Linnes, John Portus, John Hungerford, A. Lang, Bowden, John Eales, James Reid, How, Beattie, H. I. Pilèher, and Captain Biddulph.

Mr. J. V. PARNELL seconded the resolution, which was put and carried.

Captain HUNGERFORD said the fifth resolution had been put into his hand but so much had already been said that i had certainly fallen into very bad hands The resolution, however, would fortunately speak for itself, and he would therefore

That this meeting do direct the attention of the committee to the preparing a petition to the Legislative Council, requesting an inquiry into the entire system of letting lands beyond the boundaries, together with the mode of collect-ing and imposing a tax on cattle and sheep be-yond the boundaries, as well as to what pur-pose the amount so raised is applied, with a view to its ultimate reduction.

Mr. A. LANG seconded the revolution which was put and carried.

Mr. CASTLES said he had another rese lation, which he wished to propose to the meeting. They were all agreed that this measure of the Governor's was illegal, arbitrary, and unconstitutional, but no re-medy had been devised to meet it, or if it had, it was the distant one of petition to the home government; but the resolution which he held in his hand would meet the case in a proper and legal manner, and in accordance with the principles of the Bri-tish constitution, which recognised the at the sum expended upon the border of the sum expended upon the border of the sum expended upon the border of the sum expended to be one of the parties who died for that purpose; it therefore appears the heat at the time it was regarded merely that at the time it was regarded merely the steason in the first instance was merely actions beyond the boundaries, and the sum expended the parties they were not extite attom beyond the boundaries, and the sum expended the sum of the parties of the repetability of the parties by which riches came into their own bookets. He was in the habit of taking appears the sum of the sum of mand men who had just got their freedom was not prepared to do so; but the question was one of such great importance that he could not give a silent vote upon it, however unqualified he might be to address the meeting. The first reto remonstrate against any tax being placed upon them at the mere dictum of the Governor. Nothing like it had been heard of since the days of Charles I. and his star chember. That monard levied taxes in this manner, and as he said these taxes were for the benefit of the people he gave them the name of "bene-volences." Sir George Gipps, however, did not call his imposts "benevolences;" he did not even tell them for what he wanted the money; all he said was that he did want it, and he would have it; and to get it he must subject them to another turn of the screw. Such a procedure might have been looked for in Russia, might have been housed for in a Turkish which was an autocracy, or in a Turkish pashalic, but certainly not in England, which was always taxed only by its representatives. In England, too, it was always customary to see how the taxes were distanced but there was no account of sthe bursed, but there was no account of other disbursement of this tax, and he blamed the squatters for not having at the com-mencement of this tax appointed a committee of their own body to watch the manner of its disbursement; he considered manner of its disbursement; he considered that they were much to blame for this neglect. This impost appeared to have been laid on by the Governor in the manner of some eastern despot, or with the nod of Olympian Jove; but they must show his Excellency that they were not cringing, crouching slaves, but the descendants of those Saxons of whom the great Alfred said that they ought to be as free ants of those Saxons or whom the great Alfred said that they ought to be as free as their own thoughts (cheers). The Go-vernor had tried every means in his power to injure the colony, but this last attempt was of so monstrous a nature that it was

If, however, they were only true to them Governor. They should remember, also, that they had more sacred duties to perform than to take care of their own pockets; they had to hand down to their children unimpaired the rights which they had received from their fathers. (Hear, hear.) They had no right to barter those rights away, even if they could. He did not away, even if they could. He did not complain so much of the Governor's attempt to make use of their pockets, which he did in real Turpin style, for it was a rene did in real Turpin style, for it was a regular stand and deliver system, but he complained of the unconstitutional mode in which the attempt was made, and it was the duty of those who had children to resist it, and to hand down to them the rights which they themselves possessed. (Cheers.) They must oppose this impost, not only by petition, but by every other means; they must oppose it collectively, and as unflinchingly as the rocks which bound their coast opposed the storms of the ocean. (Cheers.) He would now read

That it being generally agreed on that the impost in question is arbitrary, illegal, and unconstitutional, this meeting carnestly desires to press on the representatives in the Legislative Council the necessity of gaining to themselves the sole power of imposing taxes on the community.
